Subject: Microsoft settlement

It is ludicrous to me as average person that this litigation is still continuing. When the US government is satisfied that Microsoft will do and perform in the specified way in the future, why should a handful be allowed to continue to impede any finalization of this matter. Instead of pumping money and effort back in to the economy, the government will continue to expend dollars (really needed else where in the economy) as will Microsoft.

The only people who truly benefit by this continuous ad museum litigation are the lawyers.

who deem this as their annuity. Perhaps if limits on legal costs were invoked, settlements will be arrived at a speedy rate. We also see certain states trying to exercise their muscle.

It seem to me that the last time states refused to follow the federal government - dire events followed- are we to relive 1861???

The time to finalize this entire matter is NOW. Our minds , efforts and money should be directed to getting the economy moving forward in both the public and private sectors.
